TAG LINE

What would you do if you only had 24 hours to live?

LOG LINE

In a dystopian society, Mariam, like all citizens, receives a government call precisely 24 hours before her predetermined death informing her of her final day.

SHORT SYNOPSIS

Set in a dystopian near future where everyone is provided with a 24-hour warning before their death by the government, Mariam receives a call from Bob, a real-life operator on his first day on the job, informing her of her final day.

LONG SYNOPSIS

Set in a dehumanized society of the near future, technology has replaced nearly all human interaction, isolating people under the guise of 'optimization.' In this setting, the government provides 'last day notification' services wherein all citizens are contacted with a 24-hour courtesy call warning them of their impending death. Precisely one day before her predetermined passing, Mariam receives such a call from Bob, a real-life operator that is on his first day on the job, informing her of her final day.

ABOUT THE PRODUCTION

“We Regret to Inform You” is a proof-of-concept for an hour-long TV series of 10 episodes.

“We Regret to Inform You” is TRIPLE F-rated with a woman director, writer, and principal actor.

Writer-Producer-Actor Zina Wilde and Director-Producer Michelle Bossy were introduced by Wilde’s “Billions” (2016) cast mate Stephen Kunken, whom Bossy later directed in the short film “Miracle Baby” (2020).

Writer-Producer-Actor Zina Wilde and Director-Producer Michelle Bossy were temporary roommates when Zina first moved to LA; they are both bicoastal!

“We Regret to Inform You” was shot on location in Santa Monica, Los Angeles County, California over 2 days.

“We Regret to Inform You” is an accredited signatory production under the SAG-AFTRA Short Film Agreement.

Writer-Producer-Actor Zina Wilde and Director-Producer Michelle Bossy are actively collaborating on several other projects that they are excited to share soon!

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT

“We Regret to Inform You” is a dystopian short film, set in the near future where citizens are given the unfortunate news of their impending death hours before it happens. It’s Black Mirror-esque in its premise. Mariam, our protagonist, works with her representative Bob to uncover the cause of death, which ends up being a broken heart. I was drawn to this film because of its intersection of dramedy, political commentary, and heart. It’s a universal thought: what would I do if I knew I had one last day on earth? Would I make the most of it, would I fight the inevitable, would I mourn the loss?

Jack Schurman, our Director of Photography, and I used sunlight flares to bring the outside into Bob’s cramped office and match the connection between Mariam’s and his experience. We also wanted to foreshadow the “glow” that Mariam leaves in, at the end of the film. The setting of the film is juxtaposed with the internal devastation the characters are experiencing. The perfect Los Angeles weather, verdant Larchmont streets, and the sunny beaches of Santa Monica compete with the cramped, sad makeshift laundry room office Bob works from. Sharon van Etten’s song “Peace Signs”, found for us by our music supervisor Livy Behar-Rodriguez, signals that Mariam has finally reconciled the loss she experienced.

Being a small cast, the film hinges on the performances. Kai Lennox as Bob is funny and sad: a disheveled but soft-hearted new worker struggling to get through his first call. We hope for him to succeed, but also don’t want him to because a measure of success is getting off the phone with Mariam. Kai finds a great tension in playing those opposites. Zina Wilde draws on her Greek roots to find mythology in her script and in transformation at the end of the film. She rides an incredible wave of emotion in the film.

As someone who has lived her fair share of heartbreak, including a devastating break up that brought me to LA, I identified with Zina’s script from the moment I read it. We see Mariam go through the stages of grief during her call with Bob. Bob is in a period of mourning, too. He goes from a floundering call center agent to an empathetic partner in crime, helping Mariam navigate the treacherous new waters of imminent death. The ending is intentionally ambiguous: does Mariam become a deity, does she defy the odds or does her life end? It’s in the eye of the beholder.

JAMES CAMALI
EDITOR

James Camali is an accomplished filmmaker born and raised in New Jersey. Since he was fifteen, James has spent parts of his summers volunteering at a camp for adults and children with disabilities. His experiences there have become the foundation for his desire to tell stories about those often overlooked in our society. James was first an architecture student at Roger Williams University, but shortly after transferred to the School of Visual Arts to pursue his childhood dream of becoming a filmmaker. In his third year of film school, he directed and co-produced the made-for-tv movie, A Fatal Obsession, with help from his close friend and collaborator, Ronnee Swenton, as well as producer Richard Switzer. At only 22 years old, the feat made James one of the youngest Americans to direct a television movie. Since then, he has directed and produced several award-winning short and feature films including his most recent feature film, The Mental State. James is signed on to direct the upcoming feature Somebody Loved.
