ABOUT THE PRODUCTION:

"The Hobbyist" was awarded the Paula Rhodes Memorial Award, presented to George Vatistas by SVA as an Honors Master's Degree Candidate.

"The Hobbyist" is based on the 1961 Short Story by the same title written by Fredric Brown.

"The Hobbyist" was shot in the East Village, Lower East Side and Flatbush neighborhoods of New York City over two and a half days in 2016. It was filmed on the Arri Alexa with Anamorphic lenses to achieve a textured, vintage aesthetic.

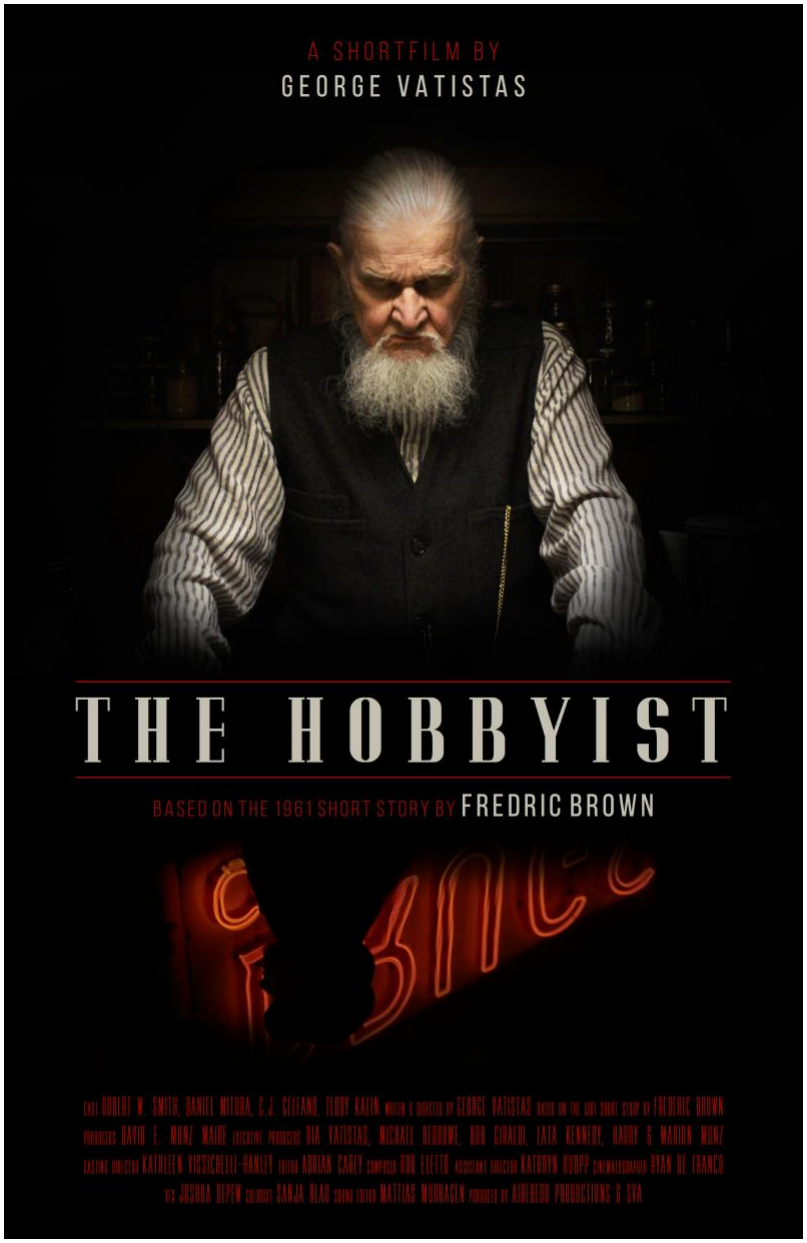

"The Hobbyist" was edited using Adobe Premiere Pro and finally completed in early 2017.

"The Hobbyist" is the second short film written and directed by George Vatistas.

"The Hobbyist" is George Vatistas' graduate thesis film at the School of Visual Arts' Live Action Short Film Masters program, of which David M. Night Maire is also an alumnus.

"The Hobbyist" is available with English closed captioning, as well as French, German, Italian, Portuguese, Russian, and Spanish subtitles.

REVIEWS:

"A highly stylized short that is really a fun film to watch as the audience is very quickly taken by the mysterious characters and their dubious needs. Actor Robert W. Smith as the Druggist is simply fantastic and immediately pulls viewers into the narrative. The twisted story of poison, murder and deceit is pure entertainment and stands as a testament to [the] creative vision for the film! Definitely a must watch for all!"

- Sam Avery, Blackbird Film Festival

www.imdb.com/title/tt6249648/

"A short film that packs a big punch, blending the perfect mix of creepy and pleasing to match its dark yet purposeful message... with cinematically beautiful shots and a soundtrack that will keep you on the edge of your seat."

- Melanie Davis, New Hope Film Festival

http://newhopefilmfest.blogspot.com/2017/05/the-hobbyist.html

"Bold and immediately catches one's interest. ... Clever, well-timed. ... Tense yet enjoyable. Robert W. Smith captivates as the character of the Druggist. His performance lends a feel of mystery and fable to the entire film, and is inspired. Casting Director Kathleen Hanley... deserves kudos for finding such an adept actor to bring this role to life. Smith expertly paces his lines, never rushing, which aids in the film's delivery of suspense. Daniel Mitura also does a great job as Sangstrom, conveying shifting emotions under the ever-changing circumstances. … The pacing of the film is spot-on. … The production design is well-executed and enhances the story. ... It's a very entertaining short film and makes me want to see what's next for AireBedd."

"Robert W. Smith provides a creepy performance as the druggist in the film. His ominous voice really sells every line… Daniel Mitura also does a wonderful job in the role of Sangstrom. He expertly conveys the desperation of his character… This short has a great cinematic look. The warm lighting and rich color make it a pleasure to watch. The old-fashioned drug store setting is also of note. 'The Hobbyist' is suspenseful and engaging in an artistic way."

- John Migliore, Indie Horror Online

"Fantastic performance by [Robert W. Smith]… Best performance of the night… Very well thought out… It has power… Timeless and chilling, but really fascinating!"

- Audience Members, WildSound Feedback Film & Screenplay Festival 2018

"Impressive with its powerfully packed, hearty plot... From the lighting to the set design, each element is appealing to the eye... fiendishly noble."

- Michelle MIDI Peifer, House of Tortured Souls

https://houseoftorturedsouls.com/an-introduction-to-airebedd-productions/

"'The Hobbyist' serves as Vatistas's debut short film and it's an impressive one at that. Cinematographer, Ryan De Franco has built quite a career in short filmmaking and his vast skillset is well and truly on display here. Everything is nicely framed and the shot choices are simple but productive. The audio track is controlled and Robert Eletto's score is something entirely new. He invokes a sort of magical essence to the sound of keys and adds what sounds like individually plucked notes on a harp. Mitura and Smith's performances are lively. … The camera work is slick, the audio is clean, and Eletto's score is one of the standout features. … All in all, this is a great little film!"

- Adam Paul Weber, Adam The Movie God

https://adamthemoviegod.com/the-hobbyist-review-be-careful-what-you-wish-for/

"Equally, if not more so, haunting than the story it's based off of. The short stars a convincing Daniel Mitura playing Sangstrom. Alongside him stars Robert W. Smith who plays the unnerving Druggist. Between the two of them, their chemistry is undeniable. … Truly eye-catching. … The use of dark greens and dark browns absolutely sell the vintage drug store … [and] the entire environment in which the story is set in. Also, complimenting the entire environment is the director of photography Ryan De Franco and composer Roberto Eletto. Coupling the way the camera moves with eerie score helps in your mind's commitment to the story, the characters, and surroundings. … All involved have a bright future in filmmaking."

"In under nine minutes, George Vatistas builds an immersive world that's strange, stylish, and completely captivating, with a score that lingers and production design that dazzles."

"An excellent film all the way through the story, technical and performance aspects."

- Nicole Ayers, Short Film Slam presented by Madlab Post

"What a gorgeous film. We really enjoyed the story, the premise and the telling of this tale."

- Dr. Lighthouse, Delirium, Dreams & Nightmares

"A film that demonstrates the director's unparalleled creative vision, breathing life into a mesmerizing world… The use of visual motifs throughout the film adds a cohesive and visually striking element to the storytelling… The film is a work of art, skillfully blending visuals, sound, and storytelling to create a truly immersive cinematic experience."

- Anonymous Judges, Student World Impact Film Festival

"In a word, superb. Wonderfully acted and directed. First class production design, camerawork, edit and sound."

- Anonymous Judge, Transparent Film Festival

"The film was phenomenal… The premise and visual execution are entertaining and have a specific aesthetic. Rich tones and intriguing compositions in the cinematography made this easy to watch!... Certainly, the most admirable aspect of 'The Hobbyist' is its ability to craft a "cinematic tale" … showing no weakness in building a world detached from our present. This film overflows with formal and aesthetic creativity, steadily building a well-structured story that shines through the strength of its world and characters. From its cinematography to a superb production design and outstanding direction, 'The Hobbyist' is a breath of fresh air—familiar yet undeniably renewed by its visual beauty and the director's skillful use of cinematic language."

- Anonymous Judges, FABA Films Festival

"'The Hobbyist' is a pitch-perfect neo-noir thriller from start to finish. From the very first moment—the trailer, the opening scene, the score, everything signals a filmmaker in complete control of tone, genre, and style. George Vatistas has crafted something truly exceptional. The direction is assured, the pacing tight, and the mood immersive. This is a filmmaker who clearly understands the language of noir and executes it with sophistication and restraint. The cinematography is moody and elegant, perfectly suited to the period piece setting. The music underscores every moment with the right amount of tension and flair, elevating the film's impact without ever overpowering it. The acting is strong across the board, and the dialogue is delivered with precision and weight. There's an authenticity to the characters and performances that grounds the stylish aesthetic in real emotional stakes. 'The Hobbyist' is a masterfully crafted short. It's atmospheric, intelligent, and thoroughly engaging. This is the kind of work that demands a feature-length follow-up, and I'll be first in line to see it.

- Jae Taylor, 3 Dollar Films

"'The Hobbyist' exemplified outstanding craftsmanship, compelling storytelling, and a clear artistic vision. The creativity, dedication, and passion evident throughout the work … demonstrate an exceptional level of quality and excellence in independent filmmaking."

- Lisandro "Lasso" Boccacci, Stay Gold Film Festival

DIRECTOR'S STATEMENT:

At its core, filmmaking is an art that thrives on the perpetual dance between the legacy of the past and the innovation of the present. My journey with "The Hobbyist," which stands as the requisite graduate thesis for my Master's in Directing, is a vivid testament to this delicate interplay.

My affinity for Fredric Brown's storytelling was kindled with a previous short film, "The Weapon," which marked my initial foray into the rich narrative universe of this celebrated author. I have always been captivated by Brown's ability to weave the ordinary with the extraordinary, to ensnare the mind with compelling twists and resonant human themes. Thus, when the opportunity arose to delve into another of his creations for my thesis, it felt like a natural progression—a chance to deepen the relationship between adapter and source material.

"The Hobbyist" is more than an adaptation; it is a re-imagining, a conduit through which Brown's narrative brilliance is both honored and revitalized. The story beckoned me with its latent aesthetic potential—a potential I sought to fully realize through the medium of film. My vision was to craft a cinematic experience that encapsulates the suspense and the subtext of Brown's work, to create a piece that is as visually arresting as it is narratively compelling.

I am profoundly proud to present "The Hobbyist" to a global audience of like-minded individuals who share a passion for stories that challenge, entertain, and endure. This film is a labor of love, a tribute to the timeless allure of good storytelling, and a showcase of the artistic growth I have undergone during my tenure at the School of Visual Arts.

As you watch "The Hobbyist," I invite you to immerse yourself in the world I have envisioned, to find yourself lost in the layers of intrigue, and to appreciate the subtle threads that bind us to the craft of storytelling. It is a story that transcends the confines of its pages, taking on a new life in the realm of the visual, and it is my hope that it resonates with you, as it did with me.

Thank you for accompanying me on this cinematic journey.
